

SCHOOL QUALIFICATIONS IN CLASSICAL SUBJECTS IN THE UK

A BRIEF OVERVIEW

by Steven Hunt

I write in response to frequent questions from university colleagues who through no fault of their own are bewildered by the choice and complexity of examinations offered in the UK today. I have written elsewhere about the upheavals of the UK – more specifically, English –qualifications system which were set in train by Michael Gove the Secretary of State for Education in 2010-2014 (Hunt 2018). We have now, in 2019, reached a position, I think, of stability. This simple article describes the current qualifications in classical subjects that are in use today. I will write at another point about the numbers of entries of students for the subjects and the possible impacts these may have on our subjects in schools and universities.

Some headline points (with reference to Classical subjects – see the glossary at the end of this article for abbreviations, if required).

- All GCSE and A level examinations have become linear. There is no modularisation. There is no coursework or controlled assessment.
- The AS examination is a stand-alone qualification whose marks do not contribute to the A level.
- Short course GCSEs have been withdrawn.
- WJEC Level 1 Latin Certificates remain; Level 2 Latin Certificates are to be withdrawn, replaced by the Eduqas Latin GCSE.
- English state-maintained schools are discouraged from using any qualifications which are not accredited by OfQual (therefore not the IGCSE or SQA qualifications).
- The Cambridge International Pre-U examination will be withdrawn from 2022.
- Before the 2019 election there were noises from the Department for Education that English state-maintained schools would suffer a reduction in funding for the IB (TES 2019a). The outcome of the discussion is at present unclear.

The position of Classical subjects in schools has been for a long time precarious. Teachers rely on good, reliable examinations and we are lucky that by and large the examinations boards have supported the subjects as well as they have done, often under undue pressure from government to produce results more quickly than they would prefer. That we have a coherent set of examinations is a mark of the professionalism and dedication of the teams working on behalf of teachers and students. In writing this article I have also received support from many teachers and colleagues. In particular I would like to acknowledge the help and advice received from Alex Orgee, Simon Trafford, Charles Allen, Arlene Holmes-Henderson,

GCSE Latin and Classical Greek

GCSE examinations are offered by OCR and Eduqas (the brand of WJEC which is OfQual-accredited for use in England) and are accredited by OfQual for use in state-maintained schools in England.¹ All GCSE qualifications in Latin have common criteria, including number and time-length of examination papers, minimum line quantities of literature studied in the original, an element of prose composition or 'the permitted alternative' (recognise, analyse and explain accident and syntax). Coursework or controlled assessmentⁱⁱ is not allowed. The examination must be linear, not modular. In practice the examinations boards have been able to provide some variation within this straitjacket: for example, the Eduqas Latin qualification has an open book examination for the Themes and Sources literature paper, whereas all assessment for the OCR Latin qualification is by closed book examination.

AQA used to offer GCSE examinations in Latin and Classical Greek until 2006. OCR used to offer short course GCSEs in Latin and Classical Greek until 2017. The present format of the GCSE does not permit a short course GCSE to be offered.

International Baccalaureate

'The Diploma Programme organizes teaching and learning through six subject groups, underpinned by the Diploma Programme core. Students choose a course from within each subject group. Latin and Classical Greek fit into the Language Acquisition group. For most courses, students take written examinations at the end of the Diploma Programme. In many programme areas, students complete externally assessed coursework. Latin and Classical Greek are separate subjects in Diploma Programme classical languages. They share the same syllabus outline and assessment model, and can be studied at standard level (SL) or higher level (HL). For a given language, SL and HL syllabus requirements share elements, including authors and options, as prescribed in the guide. The difference between SL and HL is reflected both in the breadth of study and in the level of knowledge and skills expected at assessment' (International Baccalaureate 2019). For the unseen translation candidates are allowed to take a dictionary into the examination. The IB also offers a course for Classical Civilisation under the name of Classical Greek and Roman Studies.

Standard and Higher Level DP for Latin or Classical Greek

Assessment consists of three sections (all externally assessed):

Paper 1 (35%): Language. Unseen translation of prose or verse.

Paper 2 (45%): Literature.

Cambridge International Level 3 Pre-U Certificate in Latin or Classical Greek

'Cambridge Pre-U Latin has been developed to bridge the gap between school and university, and to equip learners with the skills needed to progress to university courses in Latin. The syllabus encourages learners to read more widely, by studying Roman writers in both the original Latin and in translation and by reading modern works of critical scholarship' (Cambridge Assessment International Education 2019a). The qualification will be withdrawn in 2022 with last resits available in 2023. The examinations board has cited lack of sustainability as a factor in its decision to withdraw the qualification (TES 2019b).

Cambridge International Level 3 Pre-U Certificate in Latin or Classical Greek (9788).

Cambridge International IGCSE in Latin

'The Cambridge IGCSE Latin syllabus aims to develop learners' ability to understand Latin, leading to a recognition of Latin's influence on modern European languages. By comparing the structure of Latin with other languages, learners also develop an analytical approach to language learning. They study Latin prose and verse literature in its social and historical context, and are encouraged to develop a personal response to what they read. This will develop an awareness of a different time and culture, and an appreciation of Rome's legacy to the modern world' (Cambridge Assessment International Education 2019b).

ⁱ OfQual accredits GCSEs and A levels for use in English state-maintained schools (these include all Local Authority maintained schools, Free Schools and Academies (selective or non-selective institutions)). The numbers of schools in Wales and Northern Ireland which offer Classical subjects is very small. Consequently, these schools take the English qualifications in Classical subjects too. Scotland has its own system, which is referred to separately in this article. Independent, private schools are able to choose the English GCSEs or International GCSEs (IGCSEs) if they prefer.

ⁱⁱ Coursework and controlled assessment are subtly different. The key difference between controlled assessment and coursework is that students have to produce the work under controlled conditions similar to exam conditions rather than producing it in their own time. Before 2017 Latin had optional controlled assessment.

ⁱⁱⁱ Prose and / or verse literature on a common theme.

^{iv} Material culture or literature in translation connected with the theme.
